"YOU MOVED over here to the Walking K — or have you taken to doing all your riding before sunup?" Slade Considine asked Wynne Thompson. "A faint flush spread over Wynne's good-looking face. He hesitated and Rachel Kilgore answered for him. "I don't know as it is any of your business, young man, but that sounds like an interesting question. Wynne stayed at my house last night. Considering the ungodly hour he brought Martha home from the dance, and the fact that he had a lame horse, I couldn't see the sense in him riding another seven miles. "Thank you, Mrs. Kilgore, Slade grinned at her. "He found, somewhat to his own surprise, that he was beginning to rather like this far-forgotten, forthright-speaking old lady. Perhaps she was a trouble maker—but she was an honest one—if there could be such a thing. Martha was looking at him with the cool, withdrawn look people sometimes save for not very interesting strangers. There was in her face none of the warmth he had imagined he had seen there for one magic moment on Rachel Kilgore's porch the day before. It occurred to him that sometime he would tell her why he had not gone to the dance, but now seemed hardly the time or the place. Seeing her cool gaze slide off his face, he couldn't believe it had really made any difference to her anyhow. "Jim Ned Wheeler's dry voice broke the silence. "I hope you can say as much for your friend Frenchy's whereabouts last night. "You don't hope any such thing, Jim Ned," Rachel cut in sharply. "That lousy sheepman killed this bull, and I hope Slade got sense enough not to try to stick up for him. "Frenchy wasn't out of his cabin last night—not until seven o'clock this morning, when I called him out to look at his horse. Somebody borrowed the bay last night and nearly rode the lungs out of him. Frenchy had nothing to do with it. "Rachel Kilgore's sharp black eyes were boring into him like gimlets. "So that's your story, eh? "That's my story—and it's the truth!" Slade said flatly. He pulled out tobacco and papers and slowly rolled a smoke. "As an officer of the law it is your duty to arrest a man on a citizen's sworn complaint, isn't it?"

Alcohol Not Main Cause Of Alcoholism

By J. COLLINS RINGO

Executive Director Kentucky Commission on Alcoholism

FRANKFORT — It is misleading to say alcohol is the cause of alcoholism. There certainly would be no alcoholics without drinking, yet the proportion of drinkers who become alcoholics remains practically constant at 16. This proportion has remained unchanged since the first statistical studies were made. If alcoholism was caused by alcohol the ratio would be extreme—all drinkers would become alcoholics.

Physical or psychological factors, or a combination of both, are believed the primary cause. In many cases of alcohol addiction, personality disturbances involved may be greatly aggravated by excessive drinking. Use of alcohol as a beverage is an issue because the behavior pattern of any individual affects other persons. The difficulty arises because of "problem drinkers" and alcoholics. Every problem drinker involves other persons in his trouble, family, friends, business associates.

Major objectives of the Kentucky Commission on Alcoholism are to help the involved drinker and to prevent other drinkers from becoming involved. The belief so widely held that the alcoholic is personally responsible for his condition, that he is a moral degenerate, is erroneous. The alcoholic is a sick person. The alcoholic senses the feeling of hostility, the attitude that he is a moral coward. He withdraws from his former social contacts, evades the association with old friends, seeks the companionship of other addicts, or becomes a solitary drinker. At this stage recovery without outside help is almost impossible.

Many observers believe the effectiveness of Alcoholics Anonymous stems from ability to break through this shell of unreality the alcoholic has built. He is responsive to their attitude of sincerity. Through understanding and sympathy he accepts help available. When the general public accepts the concept that the alcoholic is ill, that he needs a hospital instead of a jail, sympathy instead of condemnation, more will be accomplished in rehabilitation and prevention.

If you have a personal alcoholic problem write the commission, Annex, State Office Building, Frankfort.

DIPLOMATIC RECREATION

LONDON (UPI) — Moscow may make it rough on Western envoys to Russia by keeping them running with new diplomatic notes, but now it at least is trying to make their off hours a little more relaxing. Moscow Radio announced Sunday night that a hunting and fishing center for the diplomatic corps has been opened about 80 miles from Moscow on the shores of Moscow Lake.

U. S. PATROLS IN FACE OF MOUNTING OPPOSITION—Lebanese watch silently as U. S. tanks and troops roll through the streets of Beirut, Lebanon. Hardening internal opposition increased the tension as the American peace force was increased to more than 6,000 Marines and a small detachment of U. S. paratroopers flown in from Adana, Turkey.
